Cyber Threat Intelligence Experts to Gather at New Jersey City University for National Security Symposium

February 25, 2019

New Jersey City University (NJCU) will host the Seventh Northeast Regional Security Education Symposium on Friday, March 22, 2019 from 8 am to 2 pm at the NJCU's School of Business Skyline Room in downtown Jersey City.

The symposium features leading experts in the security industry, along with faculty members, alumni, and students from the NJCU Professional Security Studies Department. The theme this year is Cyber Threat Intelligence in Government and Private Sectors.

"This regional symposium is a particularly valuable opportunity for professionals and NJCU students to network with leading experts in the field," said Scott Fisher, co-chair of the Professional Security Studies Department. "It is also designed for anyone seeking undergraduate, graduate, or doctoral degrees in the field of national and civil security, and distinguishes our program as a leader in security education."

"The symposium brings together key players in the cyber security field with students, potential students, alumni and faculty to deliver an unforgettable learning experience," said Deborah Woo, dean of the College of Professional Studies. "This year's event revolves around urgent cyber security issues and features a poster session presented by NJCU doctoral candidates."

Speakers for the symposium are Jon "Wally" Prather, Kevin M. Conklin, and Greg Dzsinih. Mr. Prather is currently working with McAfee and Advanced Programs Group; Mr. Conklin is with the Cyber Crimes Task force and the Federal Bureau of Investigation; and Mr. Dzsinih is an ICT attorney and executive strategist, CyAN, and EUROPOL.

The Department of Professional Security Studies focuses on a student-centered, scholar-practitioner approach to education. Its mission is to facilitate access, create opportunities and provide a supportive environment for achieving academic success through learning and appreciation of subject matter, professional and personal growth and the development of identified and marketable global and disciplinary competencies.
